

Weekly Report – January 15, 2014

Budget Conference Committee – Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2014

- The Consolidated Appropriations Act will be on the House floor this afternoon to fund the government through September 30, 2014, in line-with spending levels agreed to as part of the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2013.
- The Bipartisan Budget Act increased total appropriations for FY2014 and FY2015 by $64.3 billion. Total appropriations for FY2014 consist of $520.5 billion for defense and $491.8 billion for non-defense, both increases of $22.4 billion each.
- FY2015 Appropriations – BSTF will encourage an open process and full and regular order on all 12 appropriations bills for FY2015 funding to give House priorities a marker in conference committees. Please contact RSC with appropriations policy initiatives.

The Budget Schedule Ahead

- CR expires today, January 15, 2014. After the short term CR through the weekend, the omnibus appropriations bill will be on the floor this afternoon.
- Debt Ceiling Suspension Ends February 8, 2014
  - The Bipartisan Policy Center estimates that this will add $600 billion to the debt ceiling.
  - CBO recently released estimates that extraordinary measures will extend Treasury's borrowing authority through mid-March at the earliest and June at the latest.

BSTF Roundtable with CBO Director Doug Elmendorf – Today at 3:00 p.m. in LHOB 1628

- Please join Congressman Woodall for an informal, off-the-record budget roundtable with CBO Director Doug Elmendorf.
- Director Elmendorf will speak about CBO's scoring process and annual baseline analyses. The format will provide for Member Q&A to ask about anything pertaining to CBO.
- All RSC Members and staff are welcome.

RSC 2015 Budget – Reviewing Budget Proposals

- The Budget and Spending Task Force has commenced analysis of ideas for inclusion in the RSC FY2015 Budget. To share policy ideas and participate in the budget crafting process please contact either Will Dunham with RSC at x:6-0718 or will.dunham@mail.house.gov or Nick Myers in Congressman Woodall's Office at x: 5-4272 or nick.myers@mail.house.gov.

America's Dwindling Economic Freedom –*Regulation, taxes and debt knock the U.S. out of the world's top 10.

By: Terry Miller

World economic freedom has reached record levels, according to the 2014 Index of Economic Freedom, released Tuesday by the Heritage Foundation and The Wall Street Journal. But after seven straight years of decline, the U.S. has dropped out of the top 10 most economically free countries.

For 20 years, the index has measured a nation's commitment to free enterprise on a scale of 0 to 100 by evaluating 10 categories, including fiscal soundness, government size and property rights. These commitments have powerful effects: Countries achieving higher levels of economic freedom consistently and measurably outperform others in economic growth, long-term prosperity and social progress. Botswana, for example, has made gains through low tax rates and political stability.

Those losing freedom, on the other hand, risk economic stagnation, high unemployment and deteriorating social conditions. For instance, heavy-handed government intervention in Brazil's economy continues to limit mobility and fuel a sense of injustice.

It's not hard to see why the U.S. is losing ground. Even marginal tax rates exceeding 43% cannot finance runaway government spending, which has caused the national debt to skyrocket. The Obama administration continues to shackle entire sectors of the economy with regulation, including health care, finance and energy. The intervention impedes both personal freedom and national prosperity.

But as the U.S. economy languishes, many countries are leaping ahead, thanks to policies that enhance economic freedom—the same ones that made the U.S. economy the most powerful in the world. Governments in 114 countries have taken steps in the past year to increase the economic freedom of their citizens. Forty-three countries, from every part of the world, have now reached their highest economic freedom ranking in the index's history.

Hong Kong continues to dominate the list, followed by Singapore, Australia, Switzerland, New Zealand and Canada. These are the only countries to earn the index's "economically free" designation. Mauritius earned top honors among African countries and Chile excelled in Latin America. Despite the turmoil in the Middle East, several Gulf states, led by Bahrain, earned designation as "mostly free."

A realignment is under way in Europe, according to the index's findings. Eighteen European nations, including Germany, Sweden, Georgia and Poland, have reached new highs in economic freedom. By contrast, five others—Greece, Italy, France, Cyprus and the United Kingdom—registered scores lower than they received when the index started two decades ago.

The most improved players are in Eastern Europe, including Estonia, Lithuania and the Czech Republic. These countries have gained the most economic freedom over the past two decades. And it's no surprise: Those who have lived under communism have no trouble recognizing the benefits of a free-market system. But countries that have experimented with milder forms of socialism, such as Sweden, Denmark and Canada, also have made impressive moves toward greater economic freedom, with gains near 10 points or higher on the index scale. Sweden, for instance, is now ranked 20th out of 178 countries, up from 34th out of 140 countries in 1996.

The U.S. and the U.K., historically champions of free enterprise, have suffered the most pronounced declines. Both countries now fall in the "mostly free" category. Some of the worst performers are in Latin America, particularly Venezuela, Argentina, Ecuador and Bolivia. All are governed by crony-populist regimes pushing policies that have made property rights less secure, spending unsustainable and inflation evermore threatening.

Despite financial crises and recessions, the global economy has expanded by nearly 70% in 20 years, to $54 trillion in 2012 from $32 trillion in 1993. Hundreds of millions of people have left grinding poverty behind as their economies have become freer. But it is an appalling, avoidable human tragedy how many of the world's peoples remain unfree—and poor.

The record of increasing economic freedom elsewhere makes it inexcusable that a country like the U.S. continues to pursue policies antithetical to its own growth, while wielding its influence to encourage other countries to chart the same disastrous course. The 2014 Index of Economic Freedom documents a world-wide race to enhance economic opportunity through greater freedom—and this year's index demonstrates that the U.S. needs a drastic change in direction.
